Message from the Chairman of the Philips Soccer League Council of Clubs

Entering the fifth season of the Philips Soccer League one cannot help but reflect on the past and the formation of this Australia-wide competition—the only true National Football contest.

I suppose it is easy to highlight the successes or failures but more difficult to pin-point the real gains we have made. But the gains are there nevertheless. The wider acceptance of soccer as an ever-growing Australian sport, the greater involvement of commerce with club sponsorships and a greater awareness of all the media prove it.

There is no doubt that the playing standards in our competition have improved considerably. Professional attitudes of players and officials are showing a healthy improvement rate.

We have a long way to go if we are to attain the goals we have set and are continuing to set. 1981 will, I have no doubt, bring us much closer to some of those goals.

I wish to thank my fellow executives on the Management Committee for their support and assistance as well as all Philips Soccer League Club delegates who served on the Council of Clubs during the year just past.

My thanks go to Paul Kemp (League Secretary), Rik Booth (Executive Director, ASF Marketing) and John Frank the former General Manager and now Marketing & Promotions Manager of ASF Marketing Ltd, for their dedication to the advancement of the League.

Finally, my Executive and I wish to record our thanks to Sir Arthur George, President of the Australian Soccer Federation, and Brian LeFevre, General Secretary, for all their assistance.

To all players, officials and supporters of the Philips Soccer League Clubs, I wish a successful 1981 season.

F. Lowy, A.M.
Chairman
Philips Soccer League Council of Clubs

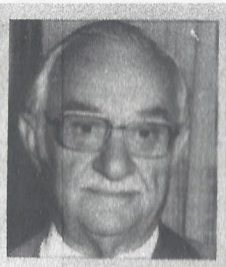
CHANNEL 0 AND CHANNEL 28



Message from the President of the Australian Soccer Federation

I remember saying last year that 1980 could well prove to be a milestone in the short history of the Philips Soccer League. And it was. The creation of Australian Soccer Federation Marketing Limited, an organisation to assist in the broadening of the scope and awareness of soccer generally and the Philips League in particular, is one such milestone.

The signing of an agreement with the new Channel 0/28 Television Network will also prove to be of immense value to the League.

But, let's look at 1981. The year in which Australian soccer will play an ever increasing role in the sporting life of our nation. We have a huge task before us — the staging of the Third FIFA World Youth Championship for the Coca-Cola Cup in October will tax every resource of Australian soccer. Our quest to reach the 1982 World Cup in Spain starts in April and again, all of Australian soccer shall be united in this very important task.

Clubs of the Philips Soccer League are fully aware of the burden we all must carry with pride to achieve creditable results in these two major World Soccer Championships.

I call on all players and officials to join with me in a unified effort to show the world that Australian soccer is a growing force which, like good wine, matures with age.

I take this opportunity to record my personal thanks to two men who assisted in the birth of the Philips Soccer League and nurtured it for the past four years, Mr. H. D. Huyer, the now retired Chairman and Managing Director of Philips Industries Holdings, and Mr. Bob Collin, General Manager-Marketing Communications, Philips Industries Holdings. The continued growth of the League has been made possible in no small way by those two true friends.

I welcome the new Chief Executive of Philips, Mr. C. Bossers and Mr. Colin Dennis, Manager-Corporate Advertising and Public Relations Division to our sporting "family".

I am sure the relationship we enjoyed with our major sponsor in the past will continue to be a good one, and to our mutual benefit.

I wish all Philips Soccer League clubs a successful 1981 season.

Sir Arthur George
President
Australian Soccer Federation

The Friendly Way

Message from Philips . . .

The Philips Soccer League is now four years old and I think we must all agree that it is a much sturdier youngster than many people expected. In fact, in its very early days I understand there were those who thought it would not survive! The strength of the Philips Soccer League and, indeed, the increasing strength of Australian Soccer, is the result of a considerable amount of hard work and dedication by a number of people and the support of a number of companies — including, I am happy to say, Philips.

I am grateful to Sir Arthur George for his tribute to our Chairman, Mr. H. D. Huyer, and to Mr. R. B. Collin for the roles they played in the formation of the Philips Soccer League.

Philips' interest is not just in soccer as such, although many readers of this Year Book will know that we have had our own P.S.V. professional soccer team and our own stadium in Holland for many years.

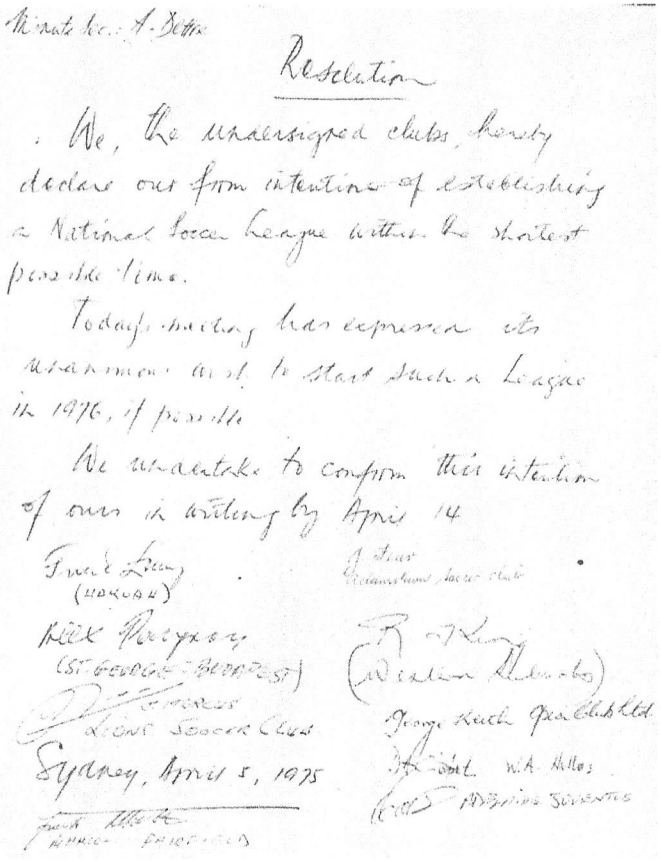
Philips Industries has taken pride in promoting a great international sport here in Australia and in helping develop a national team which can take its place in world arenas as other Australian teams do in cricket, tennis, swimming and many other sports.

C. Bossers
Managing Director,
Philips Industries Holdings Ltd.

This precious child . . .

The venue was the St. George club's dining room; the date was April 5, 1975; the decision was to form a "National Soccer League". Representatives of nine clubs gathered for the solemn occasion; at the end of which they signed a manifest, a sort of Declaration of Independence:

"We, the undersigned clubs, hereby declare our firm intention of establishing a National Soccer League within the shortest possible time. Today's meeting has expressed its unanimous wish to start such a League in 1976, if possible. We undertake to confirm this intention of ours in writing by April 14."



Minutes by A. Betts

Resolution

We, the undersigned clubs, hereby declare our firm intention of establishing a National Soccer League within the shortest possible time.

Today's meeting has expressed its unanimous wish to start such a League in 1976, if possible

We undertake to confirm this intention of ours in writing by April 14

Sydney, April 5, 1975

Then the signatures, representing Hakoah, St. George, Brisbane Lions, Marconi, Adamstown, Western Suburbs, APIA, West Adelaide Hellas and Adelaide Juventus were added.

And so began the Philips League saga, the culmination of many years of idle talking and active dreaming, dating back to the 1960s when the idea of such a nationwide competition was first mooted.

Well, the League didn't start in 1976 but 1977 and some of the signatories failed to make it: Adamstown and APIA dropped out at once. Since then Western Suburbs have cut their ties with senior soccer, St. George—the hosts at the initial, historic meeting—have been relegated, Hakoah, West Adelaide Hellas and Adelaide Juventus have changed their names; only Lions and Marconi stand intact.

So does the Philips League, the very first nationwide (well, almost) competition of any kind in Australia, the pioneer which is certain to set the pace and standard for others to follow.

About to enter its fifth season, the PSL, as it has become known, is clearly here to stay. Originally it enveloped five cities: it now has seven, with others certain to be added if and when logistics and finances make this possible. Its organisational efficiency, understandably modest at the beginning, keeps improving inch by inch, its marketing and public relations image is about to receive a stimulus through the involvement of ASF Marketing.

Not surprisingly, the Philips League has already cornered the market in the available soccer talent in the country: the entire Soceroo squad is supplied by Philips League clubs. Talented youngsters in all States have a previously non-existent target to aim at: to play in the Philips League, to get under the national limelight, to catch the eye of the national coach. This concentration of talent in 16 clubs from seven centres with the accompanying rivalry to join the Philips League from State League must have been envisaged by the Founding Fathers.

Because, let's admit it, it's chic to play in the Philips League. Despite the occasional criticisms of real or drummed up shortcomings, despite the dubious financial benefits, let alone the much-postponed bonanza, the Philips League is the new yardstick: it is the best Australia has to offer. Clubs one had never heard of a few years ago now queue up with their application for admission; others plan two or three years ahead, always with the same pronounced aim: "When we get into the PSL . . ."

There is no need to harp on the fact that the Philips League is far from perfect yet; those who run it also know that quite well. Crowds could be better and so could be standards; some of the club administrations are still haphazard and vague. The rules are still not as crystal clear as many would like and even some of the postscripted tournaments, such as the play-off series and the Philips Cup, keep undergoing changes. But that's not surprising: the Philips League is four years old and cannot be compared to its tradition-soaked counterparts in other parts of the world. Not yet, anyway.

It is, perhaps, much fairer to look at the positive achievements, the net gains and results. That the giant Philips Industries have stayed on as extremely generous sponsors, that some cities, notably Newcastle and Canberra, have become "PSL crazy", that the media now recognises the League for what it is: a genuine nationwide soccer championship.

To me, the greatest achievement has been the spirit of enterprise and competitiveness which the Philips League has spawned. Compared with conditions five years ago, ground facilities have improved vastly and more and more clubs are switching over to a professional, efficient management standard. The days of kitchen-table administrations are numbered; the future belongs to those who not only want to survive but also know how to pull it off.

The baby, born amidst the usual anguish and pain and blood, is growing up and can now walk steadily. But it's still a baby, a precious child, a national asset which needs all the care and love it can get before it sprouts into adulthood. That will come, too; all we need is a bit of patience.

TAA – Umbro

One flies the teams, the other flies the colours — that's the vital role of TAA and Umbro in the Philips Soccer League. TAA have played an important part in the development of the league over the years. A vast, interstate weekly competition covering several thousand miles would not be possible without the co-operation of an efficient airline. Umbro, since the beginning of the League, have been designing and producing the teams' kits, all of them in unique colour combinations.

Both of them have been an integral part of the Philips League since 1977 and have largely contributed to the level of professionalism which the league has achieved.

Fly to Italy and get there 16,000 km sooner.

That's because, only when you fly Alitalia, Italy begins right here in Australia.

It begins in Sydney or Melbourne the moment you step on board our spacious and comfortable B-747 jet and discover what world famous Italian hospitality is all about.

And you fly with the finest crews around. Our pilots are among the best in the world. In fact, their Training Centre is so good it's used to help train the crews of several airlines.

We've got 3,500 maintenance engineers on our staff. For every one hour an Alitalia plane flies, they spend twenty man hours in preparation.

We fly to over 100 cities on 5 continents — all around the world.

And besides, no airline anywhere can offer you more for your money. The people who do a lot of flying already know that.

But why not come fly with us and see for yourself.

They created an absolute sensation in their first season in the Philips League: their crisp passing game and technical brilliance was like a breath of fresh air for fans throughout Australia. Under Edmund Kreft's coaching they were vibrating and sparkling; they looked more like a highly polished Continental side than any other Australian team since the great days of Prague in Sydney. Win or lose, they drew applause and, by many, were regarded as the exciting prototypes of a new era in our soccer.

Alas, gradually Adelaide City fell victims of the traditional curse: the club and its supporters demanded results, even at the expense of entertainment. Their play became more cautious and premeditated, losing its adventurous spirit — and class. The natural flair of players like Perin, Marocchi, Lister, Besir and others were curbed; within two seasons the team looked like any other . . .

Despite all that, tangible success eluded them until 1979 when, at home, they narrowly won the Philips Cup final.

Just what the club's fans must have thought of the unhappy metamorphosis in the team's style from colorful to bland can be seen in the attendance figures: from a peak of 99,000 in 1977 to a bottom of 52,000 in 1980.

Not that "Adcity" ceased to be enterprising; far from that. For two years they had former Celtic striker Dixie Deans, in 1979 they had as guest player John Kosmina back from Arsenal and last season, for a few exciting weeks, had as guest Norwich City's brilliant Justin Fashanu, now valued at $4 million on the English market. Despite all this, they have failed to recapture the magic of their first season, when they outdrew all other teams in the League.

Of course, there is still plenty of talent in the team to make their presence felt in 1981 provided the attacking flair is allowed to flourish. In Muniz, Perin, Marocchi and Nyskohus they have exciting ball-players while some youngsters, notably Villani, Mitchell, Barnes, Signore and others are certain to force their way to the fore.

During the off-season the management of the club underwent some reorganisation and it will be interesting to see what effects this will have on the team's performances. One thing is certain: the Philips League could do with a re-born Adcity which is willing and capable of turning on the type of entertaining soccer few others could match.

From first to second last in two years—this is the unhappy claim to fame of West Adelaide, saved from relegation in 1980 only through an ASF vote of confidence.
Their first two PSL seasons were full of promise. In 1977, under coach Mike Johnson, they were a worthy partner to their local rivals, Adelaide City but then a series of coaching changes sowed the seeds of future troubles: five coaches in two seasons split the players' loyalty. Although they did win the 1978 PSL title, they lost their coach, Jim Adam and began their slide towards the bottom which culminated in their poor 1980 season. In the same period, their booming crowds also fell sharply, from a peak of 83,000 in 1978 to a mere 46,000 last year.
Some critics claim that the rise of West Adelaide was largely due to the presence of a few highly articulate performers, such as McGachey and Boyle, complemented by a bunch of buzzing, keen youngsters. But that's probably an over-simplification. Their 1977 and 1978 teams had balance, method and class, producing, in John Kosmina, a brilliant young talent good enough to be snapped up by Arsenal.
With the fading away of McGachey and Boyle and the departure of Kosmina came the team's gradual decline and still more coaching changes. During 1980 the team visibly lacked confidence, especially in away matches, where they could muster only a record low of three points out of a possible 26, dragging them to the bottom.
Some of the scoop signings of 1980, such as Topaz and Manecas, failed to revive the team's fortunes while Kosmina, now back from London, couldn't find his old form and even lost his place in the Socceroo squad.
Now Adelaide Hawks have pledged to emulate the deeds of their sister club, South Melbourne and bounce back as a major force in 1981. The talent is still there, despite Kosmina's transfer to the Slickers and if the club can freshen up the team with one or two useful new signings, they should be able to, without difficulty, climb to a much more respectable position in the new season.
A healthy Adelaide is vital to the well being of the Philips League; maybe 1981 will be the year when their two great clubs shake off their recent blues and revert their city into what it was in 1977: the boom town of the League.

They had one simple and humble aim in their initial season in 1980—to survive. And, against all predictions and odds, survive they did, rather magnificently finishing in 11th spot. Nobody can claim more credit for that achievement than their now departed coach, Mick Jones.

The Demons caused something of a surprise in 1979 when, as Toongabbie, they applied for admission to the Philips League; the surprise was compounded when the relatively little known club from Sydney's far western suburbs was actually accepted. They had to build a team in a hurry, without unlimited financial resources and this is where Jones excelled first.

He took on a number of players almost cast off by other clubs, some even without a transfer fee and somehow knocked them into a cohesive unit. There were Harris, Turnbull, Izatt, Pollard, Pointer and the once retired Stowell, little to make "experts" to enthuse about.

But Jones had faith and got the very best out of each of them as well as the other, younger players. Calmly, slowly and patiently he steeled them for the battles of the League.

The first game, with Bobby Charlton as a guest player, produced a shock win over the Saints—a week later came a 9-0 loss to Marconi. Yet the combative, solid Demons survived both with their confidence intact.

Towards the second half of the season they began collecting points even in their away games and quite a few weeks before the end of the season looked safe from relegation worries.

It will be interesting to see what the new season will bring to Blacktown. Their efficient administration and calm, long-range planning calls for steady progress towards the top without relapse.

The club has engaged former Socceroo supremo Rale Rasic as its coach. It will be the first time in a decade that Rasic has worked with a "small"and unglamorous club and perhaps the lack of pressure will do him a world of good after some disappointments in recent seasons.

With a thriving and carefully managed social club and their own ground almost next to it, the Demons are on a solid footing to grow into the role which was cast for them with sudden swiftness. This year they should begin to realise their ambition of stretching their influence in neighbouring districts right to the Blue Mountains—and climb up a step or two on the table in the process.

Canberra had their best placing in 1980, 10th—but the year was a big disappointment to officials, players and fans who, after the massive blood transfusion before the season, expected something infinitely more exciting.

Enormous sums were paid out in transfer fees to secure stars like Valeri, Giampaolo, Brennan, the three O'Sheas and the two Kiwis, Wilson and Cole, were also added to the squad.

The team had every ingredient to reach the top, yet failed. Particularly galling for the fans was the fact that their team, which so often sparkled in Melbourne and Sydney, kept its worst displays for home consumption.

Ever since John Warren and a handful of local enthusiasts in 1977 launched Canberra City into orbit, the promise of a happy future has always been just behind the horizon. A self-proclaimed non-ethnic club managed by a multi-ethnic committee, City had acquired a magnificent home ground, the National Stadium at Bruce and the Prime Minister as its patron, as well as a small clubhouse in the Civic Centre.

As events have shown, all they want now is results, to push their average crowds from about 4,000 to a potential approaching 10,000.

Last season looked like the year to pull it off but then things soured: the coach, Vic Fernandez and the president, Charlie Perkins, both resigned in the midst of some domestic upheavals while the fulltime manager left the city altogether. Some of the star signings failed to settle in fast enough and came a period of frequent changes in the team, especially in the potentially explosive attack.

Still, even if the home fans felt deprived, those in Sydney will long recall some of the superb displays of Canberra, against Sydney Slickers and St. George, when they looked championship material.

And that material is still there, despite one or two players likely to leave the fold. A new committee, a new coach and a revival of the old pioneering spirit can very easily transform Canberra City from perennial disappointments into one of the stars of the League. After all, they enjoy the unique advantage of not having to contend with a serious rival code in a city where organised sport usually meets good responses.

If in 1981 they can produce a winning team, Bruce Stadium — undoubtedly the best regular soccer venue in Australia — will start to be packed again.

They seem to be surviving on sheer talent and skill, often against heavy odds and even heavier forecasts, the "bohemians" of the Philips League, the colorful "Plavi" of Footscray. They are the most "ethnic" of all teams and unashamedly so, drawing very heavily on Yugoslav talent which is almost always a delight to the spectators.
Under their previous name, as J.U.S.T., they sparked for many years in the Victorian State League, launching a wealth of talented players many of whom later found a niche elsewhere. And they are still doing that launching: in Lujic, Belic, Jovanovic, Simic and others they have players with Continental skill and class envied by much wealthier clubs.
Footscray exist largely through the efforts of their little community and the generosity of a few benefactors who keep the ship afloat without club revenue or massive sponsorship. But they manage, despite almost annual doomsday predictions which compare them to Sydney's once mighty and now down at heel Yugal.
To fans throughout the League, Footscray is quite often their "second favorite" team—after their own. Their clever style based on short-passing skill, their unhurried build-up and flair for the unexpected have won Footscray many admirers in all cities.
True, their results have not been overly impressive: the highest position was a modest 8th in 1977. Often an ounce of steel has been missing from their team, that extra determination, if not ambition, to succeed on a large scale. Much to the chagrin of their own supporters, Footscray can lose with a smile, with the players truly enjoying themselves and refusing to change their colorful, almost languid style. In the past two seasons they have had some coaching changes during the years which must have influenced their performances. But now, in 1981, Cedo Cirkovic is certain to bring a measure of steadying influence to the team.
Footscray remain enigmatic enough to defy all logical forecasts: it's impossible to say whether they will play a dominant role in 1981 or will struggle near the bottom; they are capable of both. But whatever happens, they will again play their own brand of entertaining soccer which always lingers on in the memory of the fans long after the actual result has been forgotten.

Never having been further down than 5th on the table, Heidelberg must be considered one of the aristocrats of the Philips League. When they joined, in 1977, under their old name of Alexander (The Great), they were widely regarded as Melbourne's second-string Greek club, the upstarts, despite their 1975 win in the State League. Then, as Fitzroy and later as Heidelberg United, they quickly stole their rivals' thunder and gradually built a team which would have won the 1980 title but for a second last round defeat at Newcastle. Even so, they did win the Top Four final and went down narrowly in the Philips Cup final, to round off what was surely their best ever year.

For the first 16 rounds they operated under the strange dual control of Pat Bannon and Jim Rooney, as player-coaches, before Len McKendry took over. Actually, he was always in the background but in an unofficial capacity; the players openly acknowledged his contribution towards developing the team's eye-catching, modern style based on very rapid one-touch passes controlled from the midfield.

It was hardly surprising that during the season, an increasing number of Heidelberg players forced their way into the Socceroo squad. First it was only Rooney and Tansey, then gradually they were joined by Yzendoorn, Selemidis, Jim Campbell, Cole and finally Paton, not to mention the now departed goalie Banovic, trying his luck with Derby County in England.

Indeed, Heidelberg — as Marconi — could easily provide the nucleus of the national team if a coach were looking for instant cohesion and unity; even an effective and modern style is reasily available with the players.

It will be interesting to see whether the team's pattern and results will be affected by the surprising departure of Len McKendry and the return of Manny Poulakakis, the doyen of Victorian coaches. He was in charge briefly in 1979 when the foundation of today's slick team were laid.

Chances are, however, that in 1981 we will see much the same pulsating, methodical, crowd-pleasing Heidelberg as last season, once again shooting for all the top honors available.

Having hesitated for two years before plunging into the Philips League, Leichhardt seem to have lost of lot of momentum which they are still struggling to regain. In the "old days", as APIA, they were the pathfinders of Sydney soccer, the team that had everything: success, glamor and bumper crowds. Now they are facing an uphill battle to climb back to the top.

In their two seasons in the League, they had to be content with middle-of-the-table placings, something of a comedown for a club with APIA's traditions. In 1980, for several jittery weeks, they even seemed to be in some sort of relegation danger, before pulling clear.

Admittedly, they had an inauspicious start in 1979: their "marriage" with Western Suburbs collapsed before it could be consummated as the bride withdrew in the last minute and Leichhardt, rather unprepared, had to do it all alone without having built up an adequate administration to cope with the new tasks.

Similar problems arose with the team which, in the "dormant" years of 1977-78, was allowed to wind down. Attempts to find a quick solution have failed as have bids to find a few glamorous Italian stars.

Now, after two years of experiments, the club is likely to make a move to regain its old standing and prestige. Under the coaching of the quiet yet most knowledgeable Willie Wallace, Leichhardt fans can expect better things in 1981.

The club's crowd appeal has enormous potentials which are well worth exploiting. In the days when, as APIA, they were ruling the roost, tiny Lambert Park was often filled to an overflow capacity, creating a tremendous atmosphere, stimulating players and spectators alike.

This potential remains, only waiting for the right team and results to surface again. Last year's slump in attendances can be easily halted and even reversed if the club's loyal and vocal fans have something to cheer about.

It will be interesting to see how Willie Wallace freshens up his team and whether he will dig deep into the vast reservoir of the club's own talented youngsters. Maybe he will be also lucky to find a new superstar the crowds can rave about, as they once did with the Wongs, Giacomettis, Hugheses, Bottalicos and Campanas?

In the short space of 10 years, Marconi have emerged from being an obscure second division NSW club into one of Australia's top outfits which now provides the backbone for the Socceroo team. In the process, they have become the first ever club in the Sydney metropolitan area which has taken champagne soccer to the "bush", in the city's western "tomato belt".

Ever since the Philips League started, Marconi have played a prominent part. Runners-up in 1977 and 1978 in various events, they became PSL champions in 1979 and Cup winners last year, under the astute coaching of Les Scheinflug.

Not since the early 1970s, when the Saints were at their peak, has there been a club with more present or recent international star material at its disposal. In 1980 Maher, Prskalo, Henderson, Muir, Krcnevic, Sharne and Jankovics all played for Australia; add to these two past (and perhaps future) internationals in Degney and Byrne and you have a team which, on paper, looks almost unbeatable.

Some of the hindrances to more success were domestic problems within the team which, ultimately, led to the resignation of Scheinflug himself. If these matters are now a thing of the past, new coach Raul Blanco can look forward to an exciting and highly profitable season.

One of the strengths of Marconi lies in its powerful club, right next to the ground and its very capable management. In fact, they are the only club in Sydney combining all the pre-requisites for lasting success: big clubhouse next to the modern stadium, professional management, large "captive" spectator force in the district—and a galaxy of star players.

The ever improving Marconi stadium, with its two marvellously kept training pitches behind the grandstand, tennis courts and entertainment enclosure come closest to overseas examples: the Real Madrid or River Plate complexes, though on a more modest scale. No doubt, they will keep moving in those areas as much as their resources permit and the demand increases.

Marconi, in 1981, are certain to stay near the top; for this ambitious and well organised club anything less would be unacceptable.

Propelled into dizzying, wild gyrations, South Melbourne seem to be driven by a mysterious force sending them from top to bottom yearly. Have a look at their placings: 11th, 3rd, 14th(!) and 3rd again.

The club's large and volatile support must exert some cosmic force on the players and coaches in charge of them; there is no other logical explanation for the team's fluctuating fortunes. It's also worth noting that in those years when they did well, they had the same coach throughout the season and when they fared badly, they consumed three in a row.

Over the years, they had some marvellous crowd responses, occasionally in the five-figure bracket, indicating that a very healthy and steady following could be built up, far in excess of their 5,000 average in 1980. But the Greek fans, perhaps more than any other, cannot sustain their support of a team unless it's a permanent success story which, clearly, South Melbourne isn't.

Coach John Margaritis, however, may be the right man to give the club its first successes in the Philips League. It was under his careful and patient guidance that two superb young talents emerged last season, in Davidson and Blair; Davidson looks set to grace the Socceroo team for years to come and Blair may soon follow.

The team's success in 1980 was partly due to the re-motivation of a few experienced, almost veteran performers, such as Lutton, Evans, Buljevic and V. Bannon, having their best season for some years.

With the addition of Sydney Slickers' polished midfielder, John Stevenson, an extra touch of class should be apparent in the team.

Last term, South Melbourne missed out on the title by two points, after having been in contention right through, from the start. It's hard to see them now to repeat their fluctuating pattern and dropping to the bottom again, as they have been doing in previous odd-numbered years.

They came into the League only in the second year yet today they are the model to be followed by clubs with Philips League ambitions, the prototype on which hesitant managements shape their own bids.

Newcastle's instant success—crowds averaging 10,000-plus in 1979—has also triggered a minor revolution among other codes: both Rugby League and Rugby Union now want to extend their sphere of influence from Sydney through the inclusion of a Novocastrian outfit. Soccer, once again, is flattered by this imitation.

Although literally dozens of people have made the "Newcastle Miracle" possible, two, secretary Paul Trisley and manager-coach Alan Vest, are usually given the lion's share of the credit. One behind the scenes, the other one on the field has succeeded in sculpting a little masterpiece out of marble not even recognised by others before them.

Newcastle, in its three years, has become the League's boom town.

In almost every respect they turned out to be pioneers: match presentation, sponsorship, regular home match TV coverage and prudent team building. Prudence has been required because the "club" as such has no licensed premises behind it and must manage through its gate-takings and other fund-raising activities.

Whenever possible, coach Vest managed to lure home whatever Newcastle talent he could from their self-imposed "exile"; ex-Socceroo Curran, Senkalski and for a period Don Smith all heard and answered the call.

In their initial two years the letters KB stood more for than just a tasty brew: it was Kenny Boden, their unheralded, quiet English import who provided fans with the much needed star quality. When he left, in 1980, it was on friendly terms, with mutual regrets, for financial reasons — and for an Australian record fee. To some extent, the vacuum left behind was filled by the arrival of former Leeds and England fullback Paul Reaney.

Two of the team's youngsters, Arno Bertogna and Joe Senkalski came into Socceroo calculations during 1980 and Bertogna actually made the much publicised tour in November.

In the last two seasons Newcastle finished in the creditable 6th place and now, with their appetite whetted, are anxious to move a step or two closer to the top. With Alan Vest still in charge—the only club in the League never to have changed a coach—Newcastle are destined to play a leading part in the 1981 campaign.

Preston Soccer Club—Preston who? Many soccer aficionados shook their heads in disbelief last November when the Philips League admitted this Victorian club, so little known outside their own state.

However, Preston—now called the Rams—arrive with quite a bit of reputation and a good record of crowd support in recent years. In fact, they confidently predict that they will be vying with South Melbourne, the traditional pace-setters, for top crowds in Melbourne.

They have installed 2000 seats and provided cover for another 1500 fans at their Connor Reserve ground, at Reservoir and have also carried out other facelifting operations since last November.

The team itself will be strengthened from last year's when they won the Victorian State League. Their players then included some experienced campaigners, such as former national team goalie Lou Kastner and ex-Socceroo star Peter Ollerton. Gary Ward was their top scorer in 1980, with 25 to his credit. Other leading players include Rob Cullen, George McMillan, Claude Lucchesi, Geoff Faulkner, Steve Beech and Ljuba Petrovski.

The club is based on Makedonian migrants. Makedonia doesn't exist as a sovereign state though one major province of Yugoslavia is called Makedonia. Greece, Bulgaria and Albania also have Makedonian minorities. So the Rams are certain to compete for a large slice of the ethnic market in Victorian soccer — while also trying to attract as many non-Makedonians, including Australians, as possible.

A large social club opened in October just across the ground and this is seen as one of the foundations for a financially solid future.

Well known Melbourne coach Brian Edgeley will be in charge of the team. Interstate he is best known perhaps through his association with Mooroolbark in 1977 though he also coached Wilhelmina, Croatia, Doveton and Hellas.

In their initial year in the Philips League, Preston will hasten slowly though they have no intention of finishing near the bottom of the table. Then, they say, anything can happen and bring up the example of Heidelberg which, in a very short time, emerged from the lower ranks to become one of Australia's top teams. The Rams are keen to follow the same path.

The "sleeping giants" of Australian soccer, Sydney Olympians will be making history in 1981: they are the first team relegated and readmitted to the Philips League. And they couldn't have found a more exciting man to stage their renaissance than the fiery, flamboyant Scot Tommy Docherty.

For many years now Olympians as well as their direct ancestors, Olympic and Pan Hellenic, have been struggling to live up to their immense promise and potential without, in top company, winning a single title or trophy. Now Docherty promises a new era for the club.

Olympic's first three years in the Philips League were fairly undistinguished, culminating, at the end of 1979, in their somewhat surprising relegation. However, despite considerable sacrifices, they managed to keep their team almost intact and mounted a successful campaign to return to the League.

There are signs to indicate that the club's management and and administration as well as financial affairs will bear no resemblance to the often stormy and confusing days of Pan Hellenic period. With a healthy sponsorship and their own licensed club premises, the Olympians seem certain to make a very strong bid to recapture their sizeable though dormant market of fans which, for a winning team, could easily reach 10,000-plus figures.

Although one or two talented youngsters of Greek parentage, Moulis and Katholos, have joined the fold, the 1981 team isn't likely to be vastly different from the 1980 one. What will be different is the presence of Docherty, a brilliant motivator and moulder of young talent, as he has proved with Chelsea and other teams in England. Sydney Olympians have tasted the bitter flavor of relegation once, then the joy of quick return; it's hard to imagine that they would once again allow their team to suffer in the doldrums.

While in 1981 they may not be strong enough to challenge the very best, the season could see them build a platform from which, in future years, a team could be built good enough to shed for ever that unflattering "sleeping giant" tag.

It is beyond any dispute: the Slickers have been the most successful team in the Philips League, twice winning the championship race and twice the Top Four series. All this in a neat arrangement: something for every year since 1977, with only the Philips Cup eluding them.
Yet, amazingly enough, in this rich harvest period, they exerted only a modest influence on the Socceroo team with only Mullen, Watson, Stevenson and now Barnes, Boden and Spanos in calculations but seldom more than one or two at a time.
This, perhaps more than anything else, underlines the widely held belief that the Slickers owe their success to a team effort more than a handful of sparkling and erratic stars: theirs is a well-oiled, smoothly running unit with very few major ups and downs.
First Gerry Chaldi then Eddie Thomson guided the team to its triumphs — and neither worked in a fulltime, fully professional capacity. The Slickers' parent club, Hakoah, is firmly of the belief that in Australia's peculiar set-up, with "spare time" or "weekend" professional players, it is more necessary to have a solid management and team administration than a full-time coach.
This is particularly important for the Slickers who are desperate to build up their very modest crowd support into something worthy of Australia's top team. Having shed their former ethnic name, Hakoah, under which they played such a vital role in NSW soccer for two decades, the Slickers are patiently and steadfastly working to extend their appeal from a former narrow base to a Sydney-wide public.
Their shift in 1980 to the remodelled Sydney Athletic Field was part of this strategy; as a result, they had their best crowds in 1980 and one of the few clubs showing an increase during a year more characterised by declines.
Sydney Slickers in recent years have been the most prudent buyers of talent: contrary to general belief, they have been spending very little on new players. In 1980 it was Boden, now it's Kosmina — two players of international class — but very little else and even these expenses have been largely offset by sales.
There can be very little doubt that in 1981 the Slickers will be there again, amongst the honors, somewhere near the top: their whole organisation is geared for that. If they can make further progress in their bid to increase their crowd support, they are likely to have a bumper season which, because of their careful planning and management practices, they so richly deserve.

Fittingly, at last, major soccer returns to the South Coast of NSW, the vast, sprawling Illawarra region, stretching some 40 miles along the picturesque seashore, embracing a population of some 250,000 of whom some 40 percent are either migrants or children of migrants.

This, together with the Newcastle area, was once the cradle of Australian soccer where the coalfields and steelworks spawned many a fine team and great player. Not so many years ago the Coast had at least two major clubs, Corrimal and Balgownie. In the 1960s and 1970s several attempts were made—and some almost succeeded — in bringing the region under one umbrella, first as South Coast United, then as Safeway, finally as Wollongong United. Under the coaching and captaincy of Jim Kelly, South Coast had its brief spell of glory: their memorable 4-0 Grand Final win over APIA in 1963 must still rankle around Leichhardt. This was the first and only Grand Final ever in NSW which produced a capacity crowd of 30,000 at the Sportsground.

Then, gradually, a slow decline set in and the years became leaner. Now, stirred by the examples of Canberra and Newcastle, Wollongong have decided to create a brand new club and team out of thin air.

Leading the campaign have been Laurie Kelly, Speaker of the House in the NSW Parliament and Richard Drake, a livewire ex-wrestler, now the city librarian. They have managed to secure substantial sponsorship from Westfield and local TV station WIN, gathered together a solid core of club workers — and, perhaps more amazingly than any other of their deeds — established harmonious, almost brotherly relations with the local Rugby League Club whose club premises they use and with whom they will also share the spacious Wollongong Showground.

From almost 20 applicants they chose Ken Morton as fulltime manager-coach and then set out to build a squad for the 1981 season. Some players joined from Newcastle, others came from interstate and four more from England. Morton, an experienced former English professional, knows it will take time to blend his team together but firmly rejects any notions that the Wolves will be anybody's punching-bags.

"Give us two or three years and we'll be at the top," Morton says with optimism. Australian soccer could do with a strong club from this historically soccer-crazy area.

World Youth Cup

The biggest soccer event ever held in Australia — this is the apt description of the 1981 World Youth Cup finals. Under its full name — FIFA World Youth Championship for the Coca-Cola Cup — it will be held in Sydney, Melbourne, Brisbane, Adelaide, Canberra and Newcastle from October 3 to 18.

This will be the third time that FIFA will stage this event: the first two were held in 1977 in Morocco and in 1979 in Japan.

Australia, as the host country, will qualify automatically for the event while the other 15 participants have to face elimination series to get through, by March 31.

Players will be eligible if they were born on August 1, 1961 or later. This means, of course, that some of the world's best young stars will be seen in action in Australia. In the 1979 finals, in Japan, one young super star was born: Argentina'a Diego Maradona whose team eventually won the Cup. Today Maradona's value on the international transfer market is about $12 million . . .

The World Youth Cup will be held under the auspices of FIFA. This is the program:

- October 3: First round, 2 double-headers and 4 single games.
- October 6: Second round, 4 double-headers.
- October 8: Third round, 4 double-headers.
- October 11: Quarter-finals.
- October 14: Semi-finals.
- October 17: Match for third place.
- October 18: Final.
